The Japanese Government is Hast taking every means in its power to suppress Davies the emigration of women for immoral purposes, and acting under instructions from his Government the Japanese Consul in Hongkong is doing all he can to prevent an increase of the numbers of his unfortunate compatriots in this Colony. In one case which came before the Police Magistrate this morning, one man and ten women were charged with obtaining a sucreptitions passage on a sailing ship from Japan to Hongkong. The case is under remand, but we understand that the Conreplies to letters despatched from sul wishes to have a severe sentence passed upon the accused in the event of their being convicted. Hitherto Japanese stowaways Thursday, Nov. 29, at 3 p.m., for arriving in the Colony have had to serve short terms of imprisonment, after which they are sent back to Japan at the expense of theirown Government.

COPPER TOR CREAM.

The decorations this year were not ac elaborate as on some former occasions, but their general excellence and tasteful display were highly creditable to the gentlemen who undertook this difficult duty-difficult because of the invidious comparisons that are always made by that too often cantankerous individual the "oldest resident who is inclined to follow the example of Campbell's "Ascient Mariner" and fix some hapless visitar with his glittering eye while he dilate on former glories and present day decidence. The grand staircase which londs itself readily for decorative purposes was filled with graceful palma and flowering skrubs which diffused their fragrant perfumes through the corridors.

On the landing, small mortars peeped from behind green leaves and above the greenery blazed forth in the pure luminosity of electric light the Scottish national emblem, flanked by large St. Andrey's Orosses and floral greaths and festoons sur rounding the dates 1881 and 1894.

Both St Andrew's and St. George's Halls were decorated with flags, festoons and trophies of claymores and bayoness. The arms of the Society, gracefully draped, occupied a prominent place in St. George's Hall and the 'Lion Rampant' and the Scottish This were to be seen on al sides. As on former occasions the Verandaha were utilised to provide coo promenades for the dancers, and the Committee had thoughtfully provided cosy retreats where the sentimentally inclined might enjoy a quiet 'tôte-a-tôte.'

It was a regretiable feature that the national character of the gathering was not so markedly pronounced as in former years on account of the smaller number wearing kilt and plaid, and the genera effect of colour was subdued by the fewer numbers of Naval and Military uniforms which flitted about the floors.

For those gentlemen who had not the good fortune to had partners for the Dances or whose inclinations did not lead them to participitate in the mazy whirl, an excel lent retreat had been provided by the Committee in the City Hall Library. This part of the building was converted into a Card Room which was extensively patronized.

REMINISCENCES OF SIR W. GREGORY.

The autobiography of the former Governor, of Ceylon, edited by Lady Gregory, has attracted a good deal of attention at home, and is interesting reading even for the general reader to whom Sir W. Gregory was an unknown personage. The nationality of the writer, however, peeps out in several queer stories that are told in the book. The following are taken from the review of the London Standard:

HIS GREAT AUNT. He had a great uncle, who was sourced by misfortune in his military career, and be-

A CHAT ABOUT POLO PONIES.

By 'STONECLINE, in Land and Water, The question has often been disquised whether a pony likes or dislikes polo, and to argue from appearances only, it seems na tural that a puny should hate the game. When we consider the page at which he is made to go, and the turns and wrenches he gits and in addition to these the socidental bu inevitable blow from the ball or from the sticks of the players it certainly would no be surprising if the game were not popular in what a contemporary oalls the 'pony world.' But it must not be forgotten that the horse is undoubtedly a sporteman, and that from the day when he called in the assistance of man against the stag he has always enjayed a good gelloo. Perhaps, taking into consideration the war in which hi partner, man, has developed the chase, the horse, loving hunting as he does, has not been wholly a loser by the arrangement At all events, we may be certain the idea that the action of the lurge in the memorable instance related by Esop created a slavery instead of an honourable partnership with mankind would be scouted by the home. For, as I have said, the horse is a keer sportsman, and there can be no doubt that ponies often develop a real liking for and considerable comprehension of the game of polo. To take an instance from my own stable. A few years back I had a marthat might have been ridden without a bridle when once she was in the game. The in stant her rider hit a backhander she was round, and, if anything, she was too eager to be on the buil: while when she and he partner got run she steadied herself a little before each stroke, darting forward at full speed directly the ball was hit. A stabl companion of the same mare was also fond of the game, and was so keen that he had to be ridden in a muzzle, as he could bear to be passed, and would lay hal of any part of the man or pony racing with him for the ball. The carious thing about this was that he had been a perfect pole quarters stories of her generosity and kind- pony for years, and it was only when he began to lose his turn of speed from ag that he took to this plan of retaining hi pride of place. The same pony was a grea stickler for his rights. He had, somehow or other, grasped the fact that ten minutes was the proper time to play in a fast time, and, with the wonderful instinct so many The best of several excellent duelling animals possess, he knew when the time was stories told by Sir William Gregory are re- up. If he was asked to gallop longer, back ferred to by Lever, who had already made use | went his ears, his toes stuck into the ground of them. The fact I found, however, that with regard to this was that a duel had been arranged between his mind had its limits, and that if I took Sir Valentine Blake and Mr Robert Burke, him off the ground, dismounted, and got up with the eminent surgeon, Sir Philip Cramp. the other side he was deceived, and was I pony I had that strongly objected to be led 'He ran downstairs, bare-legged as he ; and she could generally escape from any man except her own attendant, and even he was he sprang on it, and galloped to his gate- sometimes caught napping. Generally on these occasions she would make her "" Gentlemen, this is all child's play. Let's | way home, except on polo days, when the boots it that it was the pony's fault? If you say so no one will believe you, and it sounds mean to lay the blame on your dumb part-But, it may be asked, what is the reason, if punies like the game, that there are comparatively so few really good at it? The reason undoubtedly is that their early training is neglected or left to chance. A pony should be taught slowly, step by step, and brought into the game by degrees. A firstrate polo pony, with speed, temper, and courage, requires far more careful training of the game, and Mr Ruskin only objects than it usually gets. How often does a man to the interminable matches, which last as buy a pony, put a saddle on him, seize a long as a Samoan cricket match, with stick, and start in a members' game before hundred men in each team. Clocks have he knows anything of his mount? If he been invented to time chess players, and have good luck, and the pony is not bit bring them to a resolution. There seems either by himself or any one else, he may to be no sport in such pastimes, which in get on all right, and then he will be so fringe on eternity. Modern players acdelighted with his purchase that he will tually go into physical training, and endurprobably play him 'another ten,' and a ance is a great element in success. The week or two later ride him in a match or chess player, like the angler (according to handicap tournament. The pony, not in Walton), is born to be so. Mr Maccondition, and not quite sure whether he donnell played before he was five, and likes polo or not; is galloped out for ten seven beat a gentleman of unusual height, minutes and encouraged with a blow or who had taken his queen. Some never two from a stick or a hit with the ballon learn how to give a checkmate, yet go on the shine. The next time he plays cunning, pursuing the hopeless with all the tenscity stops, shies off the ball, and gets more stick, of a 'duffer' at golf. One gentleman so till he comes off the ground with that rooted | bored his family that they made him prodislike to polo that his long memory and the mise to give up the sport when he had at existence of that family obsticacy so notice- tained first-class excellence. CHESS. Gentle King Jamie, who, like his grandson, seldem 'said a foolish thing,' remarkthat chess is 'a philosophic folly.' The game demands hard concentrated thought. on a trivial topic, like whist, and unlike whist, is not cheered by holding great hands of trumps, the gift of fortune. Chess leaves no opportunity for recklessness. which is one of the most engaging qualities of private life,' according to Lord Rosebery. Except when played as by Ferdinand and Miranda, the cold, concentrated game of chess appears rather a form of severe study than a diversion, to people who are not players. The Rev. G. Macdonnell, however, in his 'Knights and Kings of Chess' (Cox), proves that the sport may be written about with zest, and zest is always infectious. About the antiquities are usually more amusing, and avolution, in a sport, can be studied. know that Homer's men played a kind of chess, if it was not a kind of backgammon; that they lost their tempers, and used short swords in a hasty manner. In the French 'Changons de Geste the hero often begins his adventures by breaking his opponent's head with a cheesboard. This is a regular story opening.' If the excellence of a game may be estimated by the amount of bad temper provoked, chess comes easily first, then croquet, then gelf and football. It is ourtain that the Vikings were chess players. A beautiful set of their pieces, made of walrus tooth, was found in Skye, and Charles Kilpstrick Sharpe had some of the figures. If gentle King Jamie hated chess, his son was a player. Charles was playing chess, it is said (we know not by whom), when he heard how the 'Traitor Scot sold his King for a great.' He went on playing as he finished his zound at golf when he heard of the Irish Rebellion. Her present Majesty is a chess player -a good one, it is sad; and so is the Empress Frederick. France never had in stock such profusion of fine wines suited for exportstion as she holds at the present time. This is simply the result of the last seven copious and fine vintages throughout France, and of the depression of trade and financial difficulties prevailing in every part of the world where her vinous products have kitherto been consumed. Not only in Bordeaux, but upon all the principal estates in the Medoc, and, indeed, throughout this department of the Gironde. the stores or cellars teem with the fine wintages of the past seven years : consequently even the choicest and sacceeded growths are not worth more than half the price which they realized a

When we turn to the sparking wine districts we find that nature has been even more bountiful to them this year than to the claret regions. The latest reports from Champages indicate a better vintage, comperatively, than in any other part of France. This is owing to the more genial weather that prevailed in the north of France this autumn as compared with the south. Indeed, precisely the same contract obtained in Scotland by comparison with the south of England, causing the unusual occurrence that harvest operations were carried on simultaneously at two extremities of Great Britain. In France, however, the conditions were still more exceptional; for while the vinters in Champagne has been almost invariably a fortnight later than that of the Médoc, this year it has taken place quite a week carlier.

Yet such is the enormous accumulation of stock that, leaving the vintage of 1894 out of consideration, and saying nothing of other large sparkling wine districts, such as Saumor, there is at the present time the almost incredible quantity of 150 million bottles of champague in the Marns cellers alone, equivalent to six years' consumption of champagne of the whole world. It may not be without interest to your readers to learn also, that, according to the last official returns, there are 38,655 acres under vices in the Champagne districts department of Marne), which produced 16,282,354 gellone in 1893; and 87,475 acres in the Saumur district (department of Maine and Loire), which yielded 18,388,062 gallons, thus making a gross otal of upwards of 34 million gallons of wine in a single year the product of these two sparkling districts.
